

BUCKETFULL of BRAINS

THE GLASS PENGUINS: RASPBERRY.

Green Monkey Records

The Glass Penguins are aided and abetted by sundry Young Fresh Fellows and Green Pajamas (no less than eight guitarists- which gives you some idea of the sound). Michael Cox, the penguin who the other birds are flocking around (with), has assembled a stunning collection of mostly self-penned songs which bewitch and beguile your tattered senses, giving little hint of the bar room origins shared by the similarly spawned "Danny & Dusty" elpee of a couple of years back. It deserves to be heard by anyone who ever secretly loved the Monkees but yearned for more guitars; and it's a pity it won't get the exposure it might have done if it'd been a vinyl release; buy it anyway and file it amongst your albums. The lurid pink cover is hard to miss, and you'll be playing it so often it'll never get mislaid. Watch yer back, Kimberley Rew! (Phil McMullen).
