

The Green Pajamas

The Red, Red Rose

The Green Pajamas have released a new CD single based on the tragic news story of Phoebe Prince. Performed by Jeff Kelly and Laura Weller, "The Red, Red Rose," was written by Kelly to express his anger and sadness after reading of Phoebe's suicide following intense bullying from schoolmates in Massachusetts in January of this year.

The Red, Red Rose

(Song for Phoebe Prince)

So, nevermore to see the sunrise
And nevermore the ocean wild
And not to taste the snow of morning
On the tongue of one so mild

And nevermore your eyes in laughter
That lately held but only tears
That lately gazed with only sorrow
Across a life of so few years

One January afternoon
They killed you in your school clothes
As sure as winter's cruel hands
Clutch and kill the red, red rose

So, lost we are to ever hold you
Lost forever, thanks to those
Who built your gallows just as sure
As the first freeze kills the red, red rose.

Some Facts

Press:

"The stark yet propulsive tune is, in a word, haunting, recalling vintage Sandy Denny-era Fairport Convention as envisioned through a dark psychedelic lens - and we defy anyone not to feel a lump in the throat when Kelly gets to the lines, "One January afternoon/ They killed you in your school clothes." Please listen to this song; it's an important one. Much like Neil Young's "Ohio" brought the Kent State deaths of 1970 into focus, "The Red, Red Rose" helps crystallize both the emotions and nuances of a tragedy that sometimes get obscured in the black-and-white world of news reports."
